Get Ready to VOTE
Election Day Only a Few Weeks Away
Get Ready to Vote

As a city, state and nation get ready for elections, we at Data News Weekly in our mission as the “People’s Paper” strive to be the primary source for providing information that will help our citizens make informed choices when they head into the polls on Nov. 6th. In the upcoming issues we will provide information about voting as well as interviews with candidates in races going on across the City. We encourage our citizens to get out and vote, for these are important elections and the low numbers in several of the last elections cannot be the case this time. These are critical times for the future of the city, state and nation; many of the issues facing the community in regard to public policy hang in the balance, so it is imperative that people take part in their civic duty.

Countless courageous Americans fought for this right and now, in this election, there have been challenges to deny citizens from exercising these hard earned rights. So it is mandatory that our community come out in record numbers at the polls. These are just a few of the races Data News Weekly will bring you coverage on in the coming weeks leading up to Election Day.

On Nov. 6th on top of the Ballot is the race for President with the incumbent Barack Obama facing Republican Challenger Mitt Romney and a slew of lesser known candidates. In another race of interest, the 2ND Congressional District Incumbent Cedric Richmond is seeking re-election in a newly configured district as the result of changing census numbers which reduced the number of seats Louisiana has in the U.S. Congress from seven to six. This is an important race because the state population totals also determine how the federal government distributes hundreds of billions of dollars for education, housing, law enforcement and other programs. Louisiana stands to get a slightly smaller share of those programs in the future.

There are several races for judges at the state level in the 4th Circuit Court of Appeal with Division B incumbents Paul Bonin and Chief Justice Charles Jones facing challengers to their seats on the bench. A local seat for the Judge of Criminal District Court Section B has become vacant with the resignation of Lynda Van Davis who will leave her seat at the end of the year. Entering the race to occupy the post is present Juvenile Court Judge Tracey Flemings-Daviller who is running against local Attorney Glen Woods who is making another run to occupy the bench at Criminal Court.

But the most talked about are the races for the New Orleans City Council. This election determines two seats which are up for grabs. One in District B, left vacant by Stacy Head being elected to a Council-at-Large post and District E left vacant by the sudden resignation of Jon Johnson after pleading guilty on federal conspiracy charges. This has left two seats vacant with both races having a crowded field of candidates vying for the positions.

Rounding out the field in District B is Broadmoor Improvement Association President Latora Cantrell, Rapper and Small Business Owner Marlon Horton also known as 10th Ward Buck, Executive Director of the Juvenile Justice Project, Dana Kaplan and former Chief of Staff for Stacy Head, Eric Strachan. In the race for District E, State Representative Austin Badon is making a second run for the District E seat, also running is Jerrela Drummer-Sanders, founder of Mother’s Helpers an organization that provides schooling for at risk youth who is making her second run in District E. Also on the ballot is Attorney and Chairman of the Orleans Parish Democratic Party, James Gray who is re-entering electoral politics after twice running for District Attorney. Also vying for the seat is Attorney Dana Henry who comes from a long line of activists and has served on several community boards.

Early Voting Information
In this article we have included information from the Louisiana Secretary of State Office because we feel it is important for our readers to have information concerning voting. The 4 R’s Republicans, Romney, Ryan and Racism

I remember when I was young and learning the three R’s that were the basics for learning, reading, writing and arithmetic. Today during this election cycle we have a new set of R’s plus one. It is Republicans, Romney, Ryan and Racism. It is unfortunate that we have had such a sad turn of events in four years. I remember four years ago the country celebrated a triumph of a nation overcoming racial repression. I remember as I stood at the Inauguration in the freezing cold the warmth of the people as they celebrated what was at the time perceived as a new day for America.

During this time as the country celebrated itself and in its hysteria began to talk about a post-racial America. While those of us who have been on the other side of history saw this term spoken only by those who were racially naive, we were still hopeful that better days lie ahead. In those first months following the election in 2008 the air was still filled with hope and positivity as people celebrated this symbolic widening of the lanes of democracy. And that we have gotten closer to a day where the words spoken by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in his “I Have a Dream” speech rang a deeper truth, “That people will be judged not by the color of their skin, but the content of their character, and that all people were created equal.”

But as we fast forward four years we see a nation sharply divided. Where racial intolerance again is rearing its ugly head, again we hear all the buzz words and policies that threaten to turn back the hands of time and setting the clock back to a time where racism is acceptable. This is evidenced by what we are seeing in regards to voter suppression and talk of States’ Rights. And these are some of the same arguments that we’re spewed from the mouths of venomous racist during the times preceding the Civil War, Reconstruction and the Civil Rights Movement.

While today it is unacceptable to use some of the language used by staunch segregationist like George Wallace, Ross Barnett, Eugene “Bull” Conner or Orval Faubus men who tried to stand in the way of the changing tide of history, but their ideas were in regards to voter suppression and the standard bearers of their party, their ideas and their plans for America. It seems that the Grand Old Party is not looking at the new America that’s emerged in the 21st Century and seeing it as a Great Opportunity for Progress. But are stuck in a Cold War, John Wayne posture that no longer carries that same weight in a changing world, and the proponents of these positions resemble the clock back to a time where racism is acceptable. This is evidenced by what we are seeing in regards to voter suppression and talk of States’ Rights.

Today we are seeing a repeat of this from some in the Republican Party. Those that refuse to accept that America is changing and they are in a concerted effort to revive old ideas and bring America back to its worse days where racial repression was the rule of the day.

And what is so sad about this is that it is coming from the Party of Lincoln. A party that once stood against slavery, a party that during the Great Depression under Republican President Herbert Hoover created many of the projects proposed by President Obama and is also someone who laid the groundwork for many of Franklin D. Roosevelt’s New Deal initiatives. This is a party where Republican President Dwight D. Eisenhower sent in federal troops to protect young people after the Brown v. Board of Education and during his two terms as President appointed five justices to the U.S. Supreme Court where many landmark decisions were made that changed this country and expanded opportunities for many Americans.

I ask what has become of the G.O.P.? And why have they become a political party that is having such an identity crisis that they have let the worse of their party highjack it to where the voices of reason are muted. And it seems intolerance have won the heart and soul of their party that they offer these two candidates and the standard bearers of their party, their ideas and their plans for America. It seems that the Grand Old Party is not looking at the new America that’s emerged and the voices of reason are muted.

That’s right, John Shaft. The iconic ‘70s private detective known for his courageous exploits through Harlem that always had a way with the ladies. In many ways Shaft symbolized the epitome of tough, cool, and smooth. John Shaft is the perfect character to represent the month of October, the heart of football season, but probably not for the reason you think.

John Shaft was first portrayed by Richard Roundtree in the movie “Shaft” in 1971. Roundtree, in 1993, became one of a minority of men diagnosed with breast cancer. Yes, the symbol of masculinity for an entire generation was diagnosed and treated for what has become the most common cause of cancer in women, excluding skin cancer. It is estimated that the chance of a woman being diagnosed with breast cancer is 1 in 8. For men, that risk is 1 in 1000. Roundtree has become not only a spokesman for male breast cancer survivors, but for breast cancer survivors worldwide. He has also helped to heighten awareness for this disease.

National Breast Cancer Awareness Month was founded in 1985 by the American Cancer Society and Imperial Chemical Industries in an effort to promote mammography as an effective tool in the fight against breast cancer. Since that time, the month of October has been designated an international month of increased awareness and fund raising towards research into the causes, prevention and treatment of the disease. Though the pink ribbons representing breast cancer can be seen everywhere you turn, the real life reminders of this potentially deadly, yet treatable disease can be seen every day.

The key to breast cancer survival is early detection, which starts at home. Regular breast self-exams should be performed at least once a month, at the same time each month. Any changes in shape, size feel, or nipple discharge should be reported to a doctor immediately. According to the American Cancer Society, when breast cancer is found in the 30s should have a clinical breast exam by a health expert at least every three years. Then, after age 40, women should receive clinical breast exams yearly. (American Cancer Society; Breast Cancer Overview, 2012) Routine mammograms should begin at age 40 as well and continued annually. Routine screening increases the chances of detection at an early stage which leads to earlier treatment and increased survival.

Men should be aware that breast cancer is not limited to women. The signs and symptoms are the same in both men and women. Signs to be aware of on self-examine include: skin dimpling or puckering, abnormal lumps or swelling (usually painless), nipple retraction (turning inward), redness or scaling of the nipple or breast skin, and/or discharge from the nipple. Nipples can also sometimes become itchy, scaly, sore or have a rash, all of which should be reported to a health expert.

The misconception about risk factors is that the presence of certain risk factors does not mean you will definitely get the disease, but that you are more predisposed to the disease than those without those risk factors. Conversely, the absence of risk factors is no guarantee that you will not get a disease. Roughly 5% to 10% of breast cancers are due to inherited genetic mutations. Other risk factors include: family history, first period before age 12, menopause after age 55, excess weight after menopause, first child after age 30, taking birth control pills for 5 years or longer, drinking more than one alcoholic beverage a day, current or recent use of combined HRT (hormone replacement therapy i.e. estrogen/progesterone), high breast density, exposure to large amounts of radiation, and history of breast or ovarian cancer. (Lifescript.com “10 Life-Saving Breast Cancer Facts,” Edward Geehr. October 17, 2008)

African-American women have the highest mortality rate from breast cancer. Asian-American and Pacific Island women have the lowest mortality. Caucasian women have the highest incidence, while Native American women have the lowest incidence.

Breast Cancer is a formidable disease that can successfully be treated as we continue to increase our awareness.

Prescription for the Month: October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month. Examine yourself carefully today. If something “doesn’t feel right,” go to the doctor. If Shaft did it, so can you. Can you dig it? (For more information go to: www.cancer.org) fossils and are political museum pieces that have not caught up with the changing hands of time.

We are a country that now lives in a world that it is necessary that we in this country can have civil discourse based on mutual respect and this is the key to forge a better understanding of one another as our nation moves forward. Where we can appreciate the quantum leaps we have made in this nation by enfranchising citizens making us a more humane society that can continue to be celebrated and revered the world over.

I reminisce about how I and so many Americans felt four years ago when the world celebrated our triumph in the making of history. In realizing what we had overcome in that 50 years ago our country was divided over the issue of race and that we elected our first African-American President. And today some want to turn back the hands of time by making race a wedge issue separating Americans and fanning the flames of intolerance in this election. Today, I say it is incumbent upon progressive Americans to continue the march forward. And on Jan. 21, 2013, which will be Inauguration Day and also the MLK Holiday that we can celebrate defeating the four R’s that threaten America and its future.
