The “Party with A Purpose” Returns to New Orleans

This year a sea of ebony faces from all over America will converge on the Crescent City for the Essence Music Festival. Since its inception in 1994 this party with a purpose has been one of the premiere events for African-Americans, drawing over a half a million people annually and bringing in a quarter of a billion dollars in revenue impacting the local and state economy.

The festival is one that is ever evolving and this year continues the amazing legacy with four days of music, empowerment, community and entertainment. Data News Weekly caught up with Essence Communications General Manager Joy Profet, who’s responsible for the brand’s financial, planning and administrative functions. As General Manager, Joy also partners with the leadership team to design and execute Essence’s strategic vision across all media platforms and has direct management of the ESSENCE Festival.

Essence Promises a Great Time with Activities for all to Enjoy

“A party with a purpose, the Festival is the largest cultural celebration of experiences to empower the community,” Profet says. “It will be taking place June 29th - July 2nd in New Orleans, and is set to feature 50 performing artists at the Superdome and over 300 speakers.

Essence and Their Commitment to Empowering the Community

The festival is one that’s constantly evolving since beginning in 1994, when it was planned as a one-time event celebrating the 25th Anniversary of the magazine. But today it is one of the preeminent events catered to African-Americans.

Additionally, the Essence Brand is committed to empowering and celebrating those in the community that are doing great things and committed to service. “We’re doing quite a few new things. This year’s ‘Woke Wonderland’ theme is modeled after our highly-acclaimed May 2017 “Wake 100” issue of ESSENCE Magazine & we’ll be honoring Ava DuVernay and Patrisse Cullors with the first-ever Woke Awards. Woke Wonderland encourages our audience to be outspoken and fearless leaders within their communities.”

“We are inviting everyone to post their fearless resolutions on Essence social platforms for a chance to be featured in our Woke Wonderland Gallery. We are fortunate to have the support of our artists and speakers to advance the purpose behind the Essence Festival. Essence is pleased to partner with Master P’s Team Hope NOLA Foundation for our Annual “Day of Service” on Thursday, June 29th - benefiting the scholarship fund developed by Essence and Team Hope NOLA to benefit New Orleans youth.”

“As a part of this partnership, we’ll kick off our Day of Service with a community beautification initiative at the Guste Homes Senior Residence where we’ll gather hundreds of volunteers for a morning of planting, painting, and senior citizen support.”

“After that we’ll be hosting our first-ever Charity Celebrity Basketball Game at Xavier University. Players will include celebrities Ray J, Trey Songz, Terrence J, Romeo Miller, Mystikal and Curren$y, along with former NBA players Chris Jackson, Robert Pack, Caron Butler, Ben Gordon and more.”

“At the Convention Center, we have our first-ever three-day Path to Power, Business & Entrepreneur Conference, which is being hosted on the second floor. At the Superdome, first time performers Diana Ross and Chance the Rapper are opening and closing the weekend respectively, and we’ll also feature our first-ever ‘ladies’ night’ on Saturday curated by headliner Mary J Blige and inspired by her new album Strength of a Woman.”

“Essence Fest has come to be known as the ‘Party with A Purpose’ speaking of the larger goals and agenda she says, “The Essence Festival reach goes far beyond music, entertainment and celebrity. We are committed to empowering the people of Louisiana – and from all over the world – who come to Essence Festival each year.”

“Our goal is to celebrate our community and provide it with the tools to succeed in all their endeavors, whether it’s through this year’s Path to Power Entrepreneurship Conference or Beauty Carnival-themed Expo. Additionally, the daytime Arts & Culture Marketplace aims to support local businesses, featuring original designs and handcrafted arts from more than 300 vendors, and the Festival’s Annual Day of Service initiative gathers hundreds of volunteers for a day of community service and beautification.”

“Overall, the Festival’s economic impact to the City & State is about $250 million annually. We are creating community through the shared experience of the Festival, and the fact that daytime programming is all free and open to the public is what makes it true to the Essence Brand. The Festival truly is a Party with a Purpose.”

Essence and Its Special Relationship with New Orleans

New Orleans and Essence has a special relationship. The Crescent City has proven time and time again it is the perfect fit for Essence Fest in terms of logistics with the capacity of hosting large events and a culture that has a je ne sais quoi that blends the old and new world into another worldly experience that is unique, special and amazing.

Speaking about Essence and its special relationship with New Orleans, Profet says, “This event would not be possible without the unwavering support of the people of NOLA and the City’s administration. New Orleans is the natural home of the Essence Festival. For 21 of our 22-year history, Essence has hosted the Festival in New Orleans, Louisiana, the only exception being the year after Hurricane Katrina. In no other city and state do the roots of music, art, food and culture run so deep.”

“There is also a rich sense of ancestral pride in the City of New Orleans, one that allows our audience to reflect on self, discover new familial ties, and realize bonds of friendships and community. Apart from the cultural connectivity between New Orleans and Essence, our audience enjoys the convenience of New Orleans. Whether walking, renting a car or taking a streetcar, New Orleans makes it easy to be in the center of the action, any time and all the time.”

The Essence Fest is an amazing event for African-Americans and others who are interested to look inside the window to witness and experience the greatness of the African-American community. It is a celebration, but one that reflects on the aspirations and resilient spirit of a people who have come a long way in their sojourn in America. And New Orleans as many have noted as the most African City in America is the place where every year it is on full display at the Essence Music Festival.

Clerk of Civil District Court Dale Atkins Talks About Her Commitment to Giving Back to the Community

Edwin Buggage
Editor

Giving Back and the Making of History

Historical figure Dale Atkins became the first African-American woman elected as Clerk of Civil District Court in the State of Louisiana in 1990. While widely-known as one of the longest serving local public officials in recent memory, many may not know about her compassionate soul that cares for her community and giving back during her off hours.

Atkins grew up in New Orleans 7th Ward near what was then the St. Bernard Housing Development as the oldest of three children, born to David and Yvonne Atkins. At an early age, her parents stressed the value of getting a good education and the importance of community service. She attended Xavier Prep High School and, upon graduation from Xavier Prep, Dale was selected by the school’s faculty to receive the Mother Katharine Drexel Award. The award is named for the school’s founder and is given to an outstanding senior who most closely exhibits the values and achievement of its namesake.

“In my position as Clerk I have tried to give back in very specific ways. One by helping our young people by providing them with summer employment, internships, two by providing them with opportunities to advance in their careers by nurturing entry level positions such as in our payroll department, human resources and finances and three by giving individuals an opportunity for employment to those who may be challenged in different ways. Specifically, the office was recognized in March of this year by the Lighthouse of Louisiana for hiring employees who have some physical challenges. This use to be physical challenges. This use to be the Lighthouse for the Blind; but this is not the first time we have received recognition, because I just believe that everyone if given an opportunity can contribute to the work place in some meaningful manner and that if people have meaningful employment they will be productive citizens so we provide an environment where we try to look at where your talents are and match them in some way with what we do.”

Atkins received numerous awards and certificates in recognition of her accomplishments and her commitment to the community, including the Louis A. Martinet Presidential Award, the Covenant House Volunteer Award, the N.O. Chapter of the SCILC Rosa Parks Award for Community Service and the YWCA Role Model Award. She is a member of the New Home Full Gospel Church where she serves on the Scholarship Committee. One service that remains close to Dale’s heart includes her work with her high school Alma Mater. Dale is a founding member of the five-person alumni group, 5116 Magazine St., LLC, who came together in 2013 to keep open her high school, Xavier Prep. Thanks to the efforts of 5116, the school reopened in the fall of 2013 under the name of St. Katharine Drexel Prep. Dale serves as the Chairperson of the Board of Directors for 5116 Magazine St., LLC and on the Board of Directors for St. Katharine Drexel Prep. She is glad she can help to inspire and uplift young people.

Giving her formula for success to the next generation she says, “You have to believe whatever your faith is there is something greater than them and all of us because that faith will carry you through difficult times. The second thing I would tell them is it’s not just words when people tell them if you work hard you can achieve; and I know that means you must have the opportunities to achieve but don’t think upon background or family economic status,”

NABJ Seeks High School Students for Journalism Workshop

Eric M. Craig

This summer, high school students will have the opportunity to attend a five-day journalism workshop sponsored by the National Association of Black Journalists. The workshop, which takes place August 9th to 13th at the Hilton New Orleans Riverside Hotel, is free and open to students in the 9th Grade and May 2017 High School graduates.

The High School Journalism Workshop—JSHOP—partners veteran journalist with incoming high school students and recent high school graduates. Over the last eight years, journalist have assisted over 100 high school students in seven different cities. Twenty-five percent of participants go on to major in Mass Communication and Journalism, while 75 percent of participants cite the program for improved critical thinking and communication skills.

NABJ's JSHOP has supplied critical communication skills to several high school students and recent high school graduates across the country.

“In our current environment, it is vital that we not only support journalists in the industry but clear a path for those coming behind us. Without a doubt, we must stay faithful to the tenets of truth, diversity, inclusion and growth,” said Sarah Glover, NABJ National President. "JSHOP allows high schools students to experience our profession in a way that shows them the value of our work, and why we need new people to join our ranks. And even if JSHOP participants are not interested in journalism careers, they walk away with a new skill set and a new network.”

This year, the National Association of Black Journalists and its accompanying JSHOP will be hosted in New Orleans. Last year NABJ held the conference in Washington D.C. and it will be held in Detroit, Michigan in the Summer of 2018. In 2012, NABJ held JSHOP on Xavier University's Campus, with over 15 students in attendance.

At the end of the workshop, NABJ will display the student-generated content on the official NABJ website.

To apply, visit the NABJ official website at www.nabj.org/page/HighSchoolWorkshop16. The deadline to submit the application is on Friday, June 30th.

The National Newspaper Publishers Association elected New Orleans Data News Weekly Publisher Terry B. Jones as President over the Southern Region. Jones will represent publishers from five states, while continuing the advancement of African-American Publications on a national level.
New Orleans Native Stars in Big Picture

Eric M. Craig
Multimedia Editor

If you haven’t seen it, you’ve probably heard about it. On June 16th, the Biopic “All Eyez on Me” screened across the nation. While Demetrius Shipp, Jr., played Tupac Shakur in his adult years, one New Orleans native played him during his childhood. Eleven-year-old Cairo Moore, played an 11-year-old Tupac in “All Eyez on Me.” Moore has acted in films since the age of six.

Moore has been featured in a student film called Pangaea which was screened at several film festivals,” said Denise Roubion-Johnson, Moore’s grandmother. “Besides acting he is the Brand Ambassador for Happy Village Kids Clothing Line which his mother Renee Johnson is the owner and designer.”

Moore had the opportunity to attending the premiere of the movie in Los Angeles, meeting Rapper 2Chainz and Costar Hill Harper. Beyond acting, Moore’s hobbies include playing sports, rooting for the New Orleans Saints. “All Eyez on Me,” placed No. 3 in the Box Office during its opening week.

you can’t achieve whatever your dreams are because your talent and abilities are not based on money. Dream big, always dream big and realize that often times it is not the smartest person in the room who achieves, it is the person whom works the hardest.”

Finding Solutions and Building Bridges of Understanding

Throughout her life and career, she is the eternal optimist who has worked with people from all walks of life solving the problems of New Orleans and beyond. When speaking of the political divide that we are experiencing on a local, state and national level and possible solutions she says, “I don’t think there is a single answer, but there is an answer. When I think about what is going on in the country there is a lack of respect and recognition that we all are human beings, and I believe all lives matter and there is a certain amount of decency that we should treat each other with. We basically must find a way as a society to provide decent jobs and healthcare for individuals and I think that starts with the recognition that no matter who we are; our race, creed or color or facts of sexual orientation we all deserve to be treated with respect. We all want the same things that every other family has, we want to provide our family with a decent place to live, a decent education for our kids and if we have this available it can help contribute to an environment where we can all prosper together as a City, state and nation.”

By Glenn Jones

Timeline
Big Chief Alfred Doucette- Flaming Arrows
Big Chief Jabby 1940’-1952
Big Chief Merch (Theodore Goodman) 1952- 1970
Big Chief Kevin Goodman 1970 - present

As Big Chief Alfred Doucette prepared for his interview, he reflected on how things changed in his neighborhood and community.

Thinking about his youth, the Chief remembers his grandfather, father, mother, and older brother as mentors in his life.

“Back then everybody wanted to teach you something,” the Chief said. “They wanted you to be better than they were.”

“He was a Master Carpenter, Master Body-and-Fender man. I built race cars and integrated the tracks in Mississippi back in the 60s. Me, Otis, Hank, David and Kingsely Boy—we went out there and raced to teach you something,” the Chief never let any obstacle stop him from getting what he deserved.

Q: Chief how did you get introduced to this culture?

“A master carpenter because I used to work in them as a boy—I got one. I wanted race car—I got one. I wanted a Benz—I got one. I wanted an Indian suit—I got one... them!”

Q: Chief how did you get introduced to this culture?

“In 1952 my daddy had a carpenter business and Henry worked for my dad. Jabby, out the 9th Ward, would come and get Henry for Indian practice. Henry lived 2 blocks away on Rocheblave and he masked as a Wildman. My brother, Merch (Theodore Goodman), got interested through Jabby, and he started making Indian suits. And, all of a sudden, a whole bunch of guys from out the neighborhood started masking and it seemed to spread throughout the City.”

Q: Chief where do you get your inspiration for the themes of your suits?

“The Strange Fruit Suit came from a dream I had. Some people from around the corner were getting ready for a second-line. I told them I had a dream about a lynching and the man’s monnema said, ‘Chief if you’re thinking about doing a suit about lynching then you need to hear Billy Holiday’s ‘Strange Fruit.’ From there I went straight to Maline’s house. I downloaded it and pulled up—and when I heard that song I knew what I had to sew. I sewed that suit—Klu Klux Klan, Boy hanging from a tree, slave ships, slave auctions—I brought it to them. I put it out on the streets. I put it on their mind. When they saw me come out, they bowed on one knee. My Prince of Peace suit as well. The biggest compliment you can get from an Indian in the streets is for them to bow on one knee.”

Q: What style of beading or style of suits do you create?

“My suits are different, much lighter than most. See those boys Shaka and how their crowns can be 15 feet high in the air? Mine are nine feet. I asked Shaka how much that crown weighed and he said ‘maybe 100 pounds, Chief.’ I said, ‘wooh.’

“Tootie Montana was another one that did his suits like that. He was a plasterer and made stuff for his Indian suits with mold plaster. He made iron hook ups to hang that stuff and put it on his shoulders and walked with it.”

Q: What Impact does this culture have on the kids?

Dedication!

“Not just anybody can do this. You will hear people say ‘Boy, I’mma sew for next year,’ but that just be talk. This is strictly dedication. It’s just like a kid going to school to read and write. This is strictly dedication. And, if you don’t dedicate yourself to something you’re not going to have nothing. See, kids don’t know that what they see, and what they see is not right. Kids got to recognize the right thing will get you to the right place, and the wrong thing will get you to the wrong place. It’s as simple as that. Our kids today are not getting educated at school or home.”

Q: When was this culture at its purest?

“Claiborne Street [before the Claiborne expressway] was our corridor. They had all those Oak trees over there. We used to picnic—people from all over town. People used to come between Esplanade and Orleans and swap food, ideas and network. It was a big family thing and the Indians and the revelers used to come through and that was our Mardi Gras. Our Mardi Gras was on Claiborne Street (for the Blacks) and they made cowboy costumes, baby doll costumes anything they could think of they made. But, the Indians were the main attraction!”

Local NOLA Baker Receives National Recognition

Harvey Brown
Data News Weekly Contributor

Earlier this year, the non-profit organization SCORE, in partnership with Sam’s Club, recognized Cakes & Desserts by Monic as one of 102 American Small Business Champions. Owned by Monica Anderson, the bakery is located on South Carrollton Avenue and Palm Street.

“Thank you to my wonderful community both locally and online for supporting me and helping me succeed. This would not have been possible without you.” Anderson said.

The small business owners were rewarded with $1,000 Sam’s Club gift cards, an all-expense-paid trip to a training networking event, and small business mentorship provided by SCORE.

Anderson submitted her business to the American Small Business Championship, citing some of the strong attributes of her small business. Today, Anderson’s business stands as a contender for grand champion, which has a $25,000 grand prize. The three winners will be chosen on how well the American Small Business champions utilize their rewards, and how well the winners promote the championship over social media.

“SCORE is very pleased to honor the hard work and accomplishments of these 102 small business owners. They come from all across the United States, and provide diverse products and services for their clients, but all share in their dedication to making their dreams a reality,” said SCORE CEO Ken Yancey. “It is our pleasure to provide the mentoring, tools and resources that will help them continue to grow their businesses and enhance the communities they serve.”

“At Sam’s Club, we proudly support and celebrate the unique experience of the small business owner,” said Tracey D. Brown, Senior Vice President of Operations and Chief Experience Officer at Sam’s Club. “We are inspired daily by their ability to navigate challenges and triumphs on the road to success. And now, hopefully, the rest of the nation will be, too, as they get to know some of the nation’s most promising small business owners.”
‘FunkJazz Kafé Diary of a Decade’

This coming Thursday, during Essence Weekend, FunkJazz Kafe' will host a screening of “FunkJazz Kafe’ Diary of a Decade, a Music Documentary that chronicles the Evolution of Black Music from the 1980s to the early 2000s. The event begins with a reception at 6 p.m. and the screening will begin at 7 p.m. The screening will take place on Thursday, June 29th, at the Carver Theater. Tickets can be purchased at www.funkjazzkafe.com or at the door.

“We’ve been planning to screen in New Orleans since the film’s inception because of the NOLA’s deeply rooted legacy with music and the cultural arts,” said Jason Orr, the Creative Director of Funk Jazz Kafe’.

The film, narrated by Performing Artist Chuck D, follows the Evolution of Black Music, featuring special appearances by Janelle Monae, Jamie Fox, Jill Scott, Erykah Badu and other well-known performers. “Everybody that experiences this award-winning documentary film either is reminded or becomes aware of the rich musical legacies that Black artists and innovators have created entire genres by just having a sensibility of their social environment and the pioneers before them,” Orr said.

After the screening, a question and answer seminar will be held with the documentary’s Producer and Writer, Jason Orr.
Fairytales and fashion have been a dynamic duo since Cinderella lost her Prada Glass Slipper. In her quest for love, she traded her last season's rags for one night-use of a Christian Dior Gown. The outfit of a princess, queen, or prince is always the essence of elegance and love, and Designer Naima Furbose is no stranger to love, fashion, and fairytales.

Furbose, a New Orleans native and non-traditional wedding gown designer, has been designing for over seven years. Furbose designs for the unorthodox bride who has a story to tell and a testament to make love.

"Each gown is designed for each specific woman. I allow clients to come in and tell me their ideas for about an hour and I create something they will cherish, keep, and remember for a lifetime," Furbose said.

No one gown in Afomi Black Label, Furbose’s Brand, is the same. Longtime client and model of Furbose’s, Priscell Holman said. “Afomi Black Label is like a fairytale; the designs are so over the top and amazing.” Furbose’s inspiration for her gown comes from the structure of gowns in the early 1900s.

Furbose’s passion for art, love, fashion and production has landed her an upcoming opportunity to showcase her entire vision to an international audience during Essecne weekend. The show will be about the empowerment of women, displaying the woman breaking her shell, showing her power, all while attending an extravagant non-traditional wedding.

“There’s so much power in femininity and I make sure I include this in my gowns and in my production to show the power in womanhood,” Furbose added.

As a transgender woman, Furbose has faced several struggles in her design career. Misconceptions and discriminations are common issues for Furbose, and sometimes reflects on her design process.

“Going from a young man to a beautiful woman, you will deal with a lot of people who are uncomfortable or uneducated about trans people. It affects my design process because of the way I translate my ability to create who I am, into creating who my client wants to be through their gown” said Furbose.

Throughout the past couple of months Furbose has contemplated ending her design career, finding love, and has experienced other outside pressures. However, through it all and the process of creating her production, Furbose has found love and her fairytale in more ways than one.

“I am literally watching something I prophesized a year ago, manifest right in front my eyes. I am anxious and nervous for the show but I am blessed to watch all of this happen right before my eyes in such a short amount of time,” Furbose said.

Furbose’s Afomi Black Label Show will be June 29th, from 10 pm - 2 am at the Hilton Garden Inn. More information on the event and Furbose can be found at Afomiblacklabel.eventbrite.com or by calling 504-315-4818.
How to Maintain Length Using the Search and Destroy Method

I recently grew my natural hair to my mid-back when straightened. My goal length is to have my strands reach my waist this time next year. I have never had hair that long before. I was always one of those girls whose hair would sit right above my bra strap and then stop. I was also visiting a hairstylist almost every two weeks. When my grandmother was too tired to press my hair, I would spend about 65 dollars to sit in a stylist’s chair for a couple of hours for a press and curl. Every session ended with a trim. They would always tell me that my hair would grow longer and healthier with a trim. However, my hair never really got any longer. After I put aside my twice a month heat routine and maintained natural hair with weekly deep conditioning, my hair began to grow effortlessly. I also began to do what’s known as the “Search and Destroy” method as opposed to trimming my hair. This allows me to maintain my length while getting rid of split ends before they reach high up the hair shaft.

Trimming is still very necessary to maintain healthy hair, but instead of trimming an inch or two off every 3 to 6 months, the “Search and Destroy” method will help to keep your strands clear of any split ends and single strand knots. To perform this method, I take a section of my hair and twist it going down vertically. After doing this, the split ends should become more visible so you can easily cut them. Always use hair shears and never regular scissors. Although this method will not get rid of all your split ends, it can help attack most of them and promote healthy hair for the time being.

After clipping as many split ends as you can find, use Jamaican Black Castor Oil or Coconut Oil to seal your ends for protection. Then, place your hair in a bun or other protective style so your ends are not exposed. To reduce the number of split ends that may show up later, stick to protective styling and don’t skip your weekly deep conditioning treatment.

Happy Growing!
